(同志社)

My father worked at a mine in Texas. It was sixty miles from the mine to the nearest city, Lamesa. Life at the mining camp was difficult. Mother didn't go with Father. She stayed at home in Chicago. My mother thought that he would not have to stay for more than a few months.

The work was going along well. Father was waiting for the day when he could return home to Mother. Father and Mother wrote letters to each other. It was difficult for the letters to reach Father. At that time there were no trains or telephones and few roads. The mail arrived only once a week and sometimes not that often.

One night Father was getting ready for bed. It was raining a little. The wind began to blow very hard. Father decided to go out and look around the mine. He wanted to be sure that the horses were all right. The wind was blowing harder and harder. Something hit Father in the eye. It was very sharp. Tears came to his eye. It was so dark that he could see little. He hurried. The horses were all right. He went back to the house.

Some of the men that Father worked with were playing cards. He asked one of them to look at his eye. The man brought a lamp. He held it near Father's eye, but it was no good.

"There must be something in the center of the eye," said Father. "It hurts very much."

Another man looked at Father's eye. He found something like a small piece of coal just in the center of the eye. The man tried to take it out, but he couldn't. It hurt very much. The eye began to look very red. Finally, Father went to his room and lay down. He tried to sleep.

There was a knock at his door. "Who is it?" Father asked.

"Sir, this is a telegram for you from your brother," said the young boy who brought the telegram. The telegram said, "Come home at once. The doctor says your wife has little chance to live."

Father began to get his things ready. His eye hurt him very much. He worked with one hand, holding a handkerchief to his eye with the other. Soon the horses were ready. Father rode off into the night. His eye hurt him all the time. But he did not feel it so much now. He was worried about Mother. If he lost her, his life would mean nothing to him.

In Lamesa Father was able to telephone to Chicago. His eye felt like a piece of red hot coal. Soon Father was talking with the hospital in Chicago. A nurse said, "Yes, sir. Your wife is here. She is much better. There is no danger. It is not necessary for you to come home." 35

Father sat down. He put his hands to his head. Everything was all right. Mother was going to live. He began to cry like a child. He could not stop. Big tears came out of his eyes and went down his face. Soon he felt better. He put his finger to his eye. There was something now in the corner of his eye. Out of his eye came a small piece of coal. Father's tears washed it out of his eye. 40
